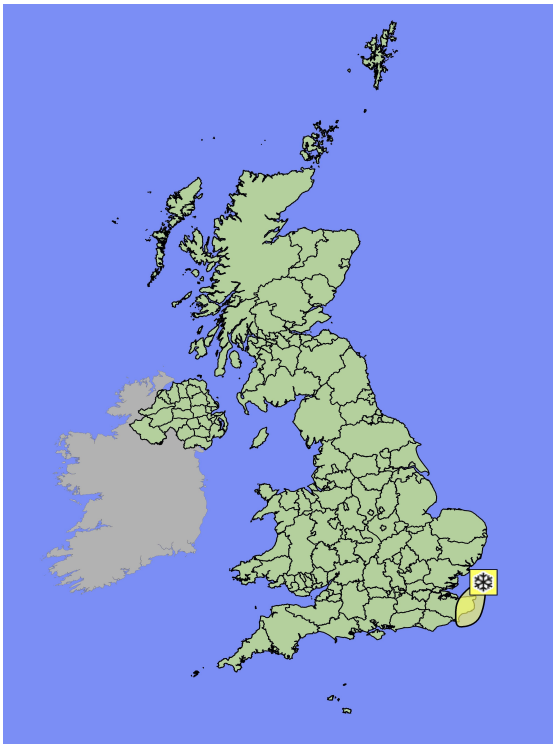
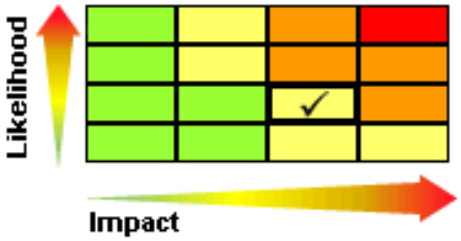
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A band of showers extending southwestwards from the North Sea is expected to intersect Kent at times tomorrow. Falling in cold air of continental origin, they will be fairly uniformly of snow, though amounts of settling snow are expected to be very variable even over small distances.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 00:05 on Wed, 16th Jan 2013 until 23:55 on Wed, 16th Jan 2013

Snow showers running across Kent have the potential to give accumulation of 10 cm in places through the day. However, these will be quite localised, with many parts, especially in the west of the county, not seeing any showers.

The public are advised to be aware of the risk of localised disruption to transport.
